Assignments and detention

With so many students having missing assignments, it is time-consuming giving detention to students every period, every day. What I'm going to start doing is assigning them detention on Monday for the week based on how many missing assignments they have. They could have anywhere from one day to four days, or after school detention. They should know what they are missing. If not, they can check the back wall where I have a list of everybody's missing assignments, or they can ask me. You can also check on Parent Connect. The detention cannot be changed. For example, if they have two days of detention (Monday and Tuesday) and turn everything in to me on Tuesday morning, they are still responsible for attending detention at lunch on Tuesday.

Week of October 22nd

History

Their interactive notebook is due on Wednesday, October 31st. This is after a three-day weekend and Tuesday. They have been given handouts to work on and glue to their notebook. They are still responsible for extra notes and drawings/pictures. The chapter 3 test will be on Friday

ELA (3/4 & 5/6 period)

The class will start a new story and learn about informational text elements. They'll also begin their essay on the Ebola virus by the end of the week after reading two sources and watching a video.
